ABSTRACT

An overview of the Immigration Reform and Control Act of 1986 summarizes legislative developments prior to passage of the bill, describes major elements of the legislation, discusses the activities of the National Council of La Raza in monitoring implementation of the law, and emphasizes the necessary role of the network of Hispanic community-based organizations. The report provides a legislative history from September 19, 1985 to final passage of the bill. A description of the bill summarizes employer sanctions, anti-discrimination provisions, legalization, H-2 and special seasonal agricultural workers, and the Systematic Alien Verification for Entitlements (SAVE) Program. A list of four objectives of the Hispanic community in implementing the immigration bill includes: minimizing discrimination, maximizing participation in the legalization program, preventing abuse/exploitation of native and foreign agricultural workers, and eliminating wrongful denial of benefits to eligible persons. A summary of National Council of La Raza activities includes preparation of press statements, convening task forces to work closely with federal agencies to draft regulations to implement provisions of the new law, coordinating information dissemination to the public, and identifying problem areas requiring remedial legislation or Congressional oversight. Suggestions for types of information needed from local groups are included. House and Senate voting records are attached. (LFL)

I. OVERVIEW

On November 6, 1986, the President signed the Immigration Reform and Control Act of 1986, otherwise known as the Simpson-Rodino bill, thus culminating a six-year struggle in the Congress to enact landmark immigration reform legislation.

The purposes of this Issue Update are to inform the National Council of La Raza's network of the legislative developments leading up to passage of the bill, briefly describe the major elements of the legislation, and discuss the Council's future activities in monitoring implementation of the new law, and the necessary role for the Council network, especially Hispanic community-based organizations.

II. LEGISLATIVE HISTORY

The Senate passed its version of the immigration bill (S. 1200) on September 19, 1985, by a vote of 69-30 (see "Immigration Reform and Related Issues III," Issue Brief, National Council of La Raza, December 1985). The bill contained a limited and uncertain legalization program, employer sanctions without anti-discrimination protections, and a massive new guestworker program without civil rights protections for foreign farmworkers. The Council and other civil rights and religious groups opposed this version of the bill.

In the House, Judiciary Chairman Peter Rodino (D-NJ) and Immigration Subcommittee Chairman Romano Mazzoli (D-KY) introduced the Immigration Control and Legalization Amendments Act (H.R. 3080, later amended as H.R. 3810) in July 1985. On November 19, 1985, the bill was favorably reported out of subcommittee. Although many observers expected consideration by the Judiciary Committee soon thereafter, it was not until June 1986 that the full Committee completed action on the bill.

RC016220

This delay was due largely to a series of negotiations led by Rep. Charles Schumer (D-NY) on the agricultural workers section of the legislation. This section of the bill was increasingly seen as impeding movement of the bill, since Rep. Rodino announced that he would not allow addition of a major "guestworker" program of the scope included in the Senate bill, and grower interests strenuously opposed the bill without such a program. Rep. Schumer, working closely with Rep. Howard Berman (D-CA), who represented farmworker interests, and Rep. Leon Panetta (D-CA), who represented grower interests, sought to remove the guestworker issue as a major obstacle to movement of the bill.

In June, the deadlock was broken when the Judiciary Committee adopted, by a 19-16 vote, the so-called "Schumer compromise," which would have guaranteed growers a steady supply of labor, but which sought to protect farmworker interests through the provision of full permanent residence status ("green cards") to foreign workers.

After being reported out by the full Judiciary Committee, the bill was "sequentially referred" to five other Committees with jurisdiction over various parts of the legislation. The agricultural worker provisions of the bill were, by informal agreement among the Chairpersons of these Committees, "protected" against amendments during consideration by the other Committees. The sequential referral process was completed on August 5.

Most observers expected the bill to go to the House floor immediately, but growing controversy over the substance of the Schumer provisions and the procedures used to protect it from amendment again delayed action. The controversy was centered on the House Rules Committee, which determines the conditions under which bills are to be debated on the House floor. The Rules Committee initially reported out a rule (a resolution governing time limits for debate, and the number and nature of amendments allowed to be offered on the floor) that incorporated some 23 amendments into the bill, without a full House vote, including the amendment to suspend deportation of Salvadorans and Nicaraguans, an amendment to "sunset" employer sanctions after five years, and a series of amendments making the SAVE (Systematic Alien Verification for Entitlements) program optional instead of mandatory. (The Council and other civil rights groups supported these amendments.) The rule also prohibited any amendment to remove or modify the agricultural worker provisions of the bill. These aspects of the rule, especially the inability to change or strike the Schumer "green card" provisions, were vigorously opposed by the Republican minority, led by Rep. Dan Lungren (R-CA).

On September 26, after heated debate, the House defeated this rule by a 202-180 vote, thus ending debate on the immigration bill. The vote was split largely along party lines, with virtually all Republicans opposing the rule and most Democrats supporting it (see attached votes). Most observers believed at this point that the bill was dead, citing the scheduled Congressional adjournment date of October 3, and Rep. Rodino's statement that he "absolutely" did not intend to revive the bill.

Two forces combined to revive the bill. First, many "must-pass" pieces of legislation, including a catch-all appropriations measure, were bottled-up in House-Senate conference committees, resulting in an extension of the Congressional session from October 3 to October 18. Second, both the Republicans, who led the effort to kill the rule, and the Democrats, who insisted on protecting the Schumer provisions, were stung by charges that they had acted irresponsibly in failing to enact immigration reform legislation. Neither party wanted to take responsibility for killing the immigration bill.

As the session dragged on, a series of negotiations led to the formulation of a second rule. House Republicans agreed to allow the Schumer provisions to be closed off, in return for relatively minor changes in the agricultural workers section of the bill. The Democrats agreed to allow a motion to strike the provisions, sponsored by Rep. Joe Moakley (D-MA), that would suspend the deportation of Salvadorans and Nicaraguans. Except for these and some other minor changes, the second rule was essentially the same as that previously defeated by the House. The second rule passed by a vote of 278-129.

On October 9, the House passed the immigration bill by a vote of 230-166. While the Council considered this version of the bill to be a significant improvement over the Senate version, the employer sanctions provisions and other limitations on civil rights protections led to La Raza opposition of the bill. The bill went immediately to a House-Senate conference committee, in order to resolve the considerable differences between the House and Senate versions. Conferees met from October 10 through October 14, when, after a six-hour closed session, they emerged to declare that a conference agreement had been reached. The House passed the conference report the next day by a 238-173 vote; the Senate approved it on October 17 by a 63-24 vote (all major votes described here are attached). The Council did not support the bill, but does believe it was probably the least damaging legislation possible given the current political climate. (Attached is a copy of Council President Raul Yzaguirre's statement upon passage of the bill.)

III. DESCRIPTION OF THE BILL

Following is a very brief description of the major provisions of the bill. A more detailed outline of the entire bill prepared by the American Immigration Lawyers Association is attached.

A. Employer Sanctions

- Makes it unlawful for any person to knowingly hire, recruit or refer for a fee any alien not authorized to work in the U.S. (Note: The bill covers only new hires; current employees are not affected.)

- Requires employers to verify the status of all new hires by examining either a passport, certificate of U.S. citizenship, a certification of naturalization or a resident alien card. If these are not available, verification can be established by a combination of papers showing authority to work and identity, (for example, a driver's license and either a U.S. birth certificate or a Social Security card).

- Requires employers to attest in writing under penalty of perjury that they saw such documentation before any hiring, and employees to attest in writing before being hired that they are authorized to work in the U.S.

- Requires employers, recruiters and those who refer persons for employment to keep records of the verification process. Violators are subject to a civil fine of not less than $100 nor more than $1,000. Employers who have complied in good faith with the verification procedure have an affirmative defense against charges of violating sanctions.

- Provides a six month education period during which employers will not be subject to penalties and a subsequent 12-month period in which a violator will be given a warning citation for the first offense.

- Establishes the following fines for violations after the citation period:

  - .. First Offense - Civil fine of not less than $250 nor more than $2,000 for each illegal alien found to be hired.

  - .. Second Offense - Civil fine of not less than $2,000 nor more than $5,000 per illegal alien.

  - .. Third Offense - Civil fine of not less than $3,000 nor more than $10,000 per illegal alien.

  - .. In addition, criminal penalties of up to six months imprisonment and/or a $3,000 fine for a "pattern or practice" of knowingly hiring illegal aliens.

B. Anti-Discrimination Provisions

- Bars employers from discriminating against persons on the basis of citizenship status or national origin. This provision covers only those permanent or temporary residents who have shown an intention to become citizens.

- Specifies that an employer is not liable for action if, between two equally qualified people, he chooses the U.S. citizen over the legal resident alien.

- Exempts employers of three or fewer workers.

C. Legalization

- Provides a twelve month period beginning May 6, 1987 for aliens who have resided continuously in the U.S. since before January 1, 1982 to apply for temporary residency.

- Makes clear that an alien's "brief, casual and innocent" trip outside of the U.S. does not constitute a failure to maintain a continuous physical presence in the United States.

- Provides for a 12 month period following an 18 month temporary residency status in which to become a permanent resident. In addition, a minimum understanding of English and a knowledge of U.S. government and history must be shown or one must be pursuing a course of instruction to gain such knowledge.

- Bars newly legalized aliens from most forms of direct public assistance for five years. Exceptions are made for emergency medical care, aid to the aged, blind or disabled, for serious injury or assistance when needed in the interest of public health.

- Provides permanent residence status for certain Cubans and Haitians who entered the U.S. prior to January 1, 1982.

- Ensures the confidentiality of records except to determine the merits of the application or to identify fraud.

- Allows legal status to aliens who can show they have been in the U.S. prior to January 1, 1972 and have lived in the country continuously since then.

D. Agricultural Workers

1. H-2 Workers

.. Requires an employer to apply to the Secretary of Labor no more than 60 days in advance of needing foreign workers and requires the employer to try to recruit domestic workers.

.. Requires the Secretary of Labor to decide on the request no later than 20 days in advance of an employer's need.

.. Provides an expedited procedure for getting workers if the Secretary of Labor had determined that U.S. workers would have been available but the employer subsequently found that workers were not qualified and available.

.. Guarantees H-2 workers benefits such as housing and worker compensation, travel and subsistence costs.

.. Allows H-2 workers to get help from federally funded Legal Services Corporation in disputes over wages, hours and working conditions.

2. Special Seasonal Agricultural Workers

.. Provides temporary residence status for aliens who can prove they have lived in the U.S. for at least three years and have worked at least 90 days in American agriculture in each of those years. They can adjust to permanent residence status after an additional year or within three years of enactment, whichever is later.

.. Provides temporary status for aliens who have worked 90 days in agriculture between May 1985 and May 1986. They can become permanent residents two years after they have received their temporary status or three years after enactment, whichever is later. Workers will not have to remain in agricultural jobs once they have received tem porary benefits.

.. Disqualifies workers from receiving most welfare benefits for five years after attaining temporary residency status. Exceptions are assistance furnished under the Legal Services Corporation Act and under Title V of the Housing Act.

.. Provides for "replenishment" farm labor to replace those who leave agriculture and allows those new workers to enter the U.S. as temporary residents. They will have to work at least 90 days in agriculture for three years; after three years they can apply to become permanent residents. In addition, they will be barred from receiving most public aid for five years after becoming temporary residents.

.. Terminates the replenishment worker program seven years after enactment.

E. SAVE Program

- Provides for nationwide implementation of the SAVE (Systematic Alien Verification for Entitlements) Program by October 1, 1988.

- Requires SAVE verification of the immigration status of non-citizens applying for public assistance programs, including Food Stamps, Aid to Families with Dependent Children, subsidized housing, student grants and loans, and unemployment insurance.

- Provides for a study of the SAVE program by the General Accounting Office (GAO); requires GAO to report its findings to the Congress by October 1, 1987.

- Provides that implementation of SAVE can be waived for certain programs at the discretion of federal agencies; requests for waivers can be initiated by states and localities.

IV. HISPANIC IMPLEMENTATION OBJECTIVES

From the perspective of the Hispanic community, there are four primary objectives to consider as the new immigration bill is implemented:

- Minimizing discrimination and other undesirable effects of employer sanctions;

- Maximizing the participation of eligible persons in the legalization program;

- Preventing abuse and exploitation of both native and foreign agricultural workers in the implementation of the farmworker provisions of the bill; and

- Eliminating the wrongful denial of benefits to eligible persons.

The implementation issues associated with each of these objectives are varied and complex. A comprehensive assessment of these issues is now being prepared, and will be included in the National Council's next mailing. In addition, a Council Alert is enclosed, outlining some "Do's and Don'ts" regarding the immigration bill in the short term.

V. NATIONAL COUNCIL OF LA RAZA ACTIVITY

The Council is working in coalition with a broad range of interest groups, Congressional offices, and private-sector organizations to achieve the above-listed objectives.

One initial activity of the coalition was the preparation of a press statement which was issued by Rep. Edward Roybal (D-CA) and Rep. Esteban Torres (D-CA) in cooperation with a number of national organizations. A copy of the statement is attached together with a "Question and Answer" piece on the bill prepared by the coalition.

The coalition is now in the process of convening a series of task forces to work on various aspects of the bill. While the focus and composition of these task forces are not completely defined, the coalition expects to concentrate on the following broad tasks:

- Working closely with the Immigration and Naturalization Service (INS) and other federal agencies on drafting regulations to implement employer sanctions, legalization, the agricultural worker provisions, and the SAVE program.

- Providing a coordinated system of information dissemination to the general public, business, state and local governments, and community groups. The initial focus will be on providing accurate general information on the bill to the public and the news media. It is hoped that a "clearinghouse" function can also be established to provide ongoing detailed information to interested parties in the field.

- Identifying problem areas that may require remedial legislation or Congressional oversight, and working with Congress and the Executive Branch to address these problems.

More detailed information on the coalition's activities will be provided as it becomes available.

VI. CONCLUSION

It is now clear that monitoring the implementation of the bill — and identifying and addressing potential problems — will be an enormous task, both in the short- and in the long-term. The Council is committed to playing a major role in this process, and is prepared to allocate substantial policy analysis resources to this task. The Council's ability to do so effectively depends in large part on knowing what is happening "on the ground" in various parts of the country.

We are especially interested in receiving information from the network [news clippings or documents] on:

- Incidents of discrimination against citizens or legal permanent resident aliens in employment or in other contexts;
- Premature or illegal layoffs or firings of persons suspected of being undocumented;
- Advertisements and/or leaflets by individuals or corporations purporting to assist undocumented persons to legalize their status; and
- Announcements by states or localities regarding implementation of the SAVE program.

If you have information about what is happening in your locality, or if you need more information regarding the new immigration bill, please contact Charles Kamasaki or Rose Briceno at (202) 628-9600.
